Spotlight on suppliers

THIS year the InterGame Year Book has a new look. It is more compact in size and puts increased emphasis on the main ingredient – the directory.

We believe our listing of suppliers to the games and gaming industries is the most comprehensive available and therefore we decided to make it the main focus of the Year Book.

That said, the publication still provides a snapshot of the year 2014, highlighting the main events as reported in our InterGame, InterGaming and INTERGAMINGi magazines.

It has been another year of recovery and consolidation as the industries we represent continue to climb slowly out of the recession. The year ahead promises more of the same so let's embrace it in a spirit of optimism and endeavour.

WITH positives from every other one of our “seven continents” of games and gaming, it is almost depressing to relate that Europe potters along behind all of the others with almost indifference. It is of course, the symptom of an environment largely dominated by low-level payout machines, the ubiquitous AWP or whatever name it goes by in the individual countries.

Operators will inevitably prefer to direct their investment resources into AWP machines a long way ahead of pure amusement devices for the simple commercial expedient that the return is so much better.

On the other hand, there is a huge family audience in Europe, all with disposable income and all ready to accept alternatives in terms of pastimes, especially if the whole family can take part and at a cost which is not overly unacceptable.

The principle seems to be largely accepted by one sector of the European operating community, the seashores. Those countries with long coastlines, Spain, France, Italy, the UK, Belgium and Netherlands enjoy traditional family holiday periods and cater for them with arcades, for the most part dedicated entirely to amusement games.

But the family entertainment centre or FEC, as we know it so well in other continents, particularly North America and the Middle East, is a rare commodity in Europe. Some countries, Germany for example, are so overpowered by the attraction of payout machines, that families are simply not catered for at all.

This may change, certainly in Germany, where the animosity of the local authorities is directed at the country's thousands of arcades, which are almost entirely given over to payout machines of the AWP type. Their animosity is ostensibly fed by concerns for the welfare of the vulnerable among their communities, but anyone with a grain of application can see that it is in reality a protectionist attitude towards the casinos, which are largely owned by local government.

The AWP machine is kind. Over a million of them exist in Europe, with Italy the strongest numerically, followed by Germany, Spain and the UK, but most countries – but not all – have AWP's of one type or another. The trend in the past year has been for Germany to be threatened and for the big operators there to throw investment into stable alternatives, in this case the UK. Britain is indeed stable and provides a reasonable and well-governed basis for the industry. Spain's AWP business has been hammered by appalling levels of economic depression. Italy has overheated by over-population of machines and hampered by economic woes.

Europe, therefore, is a solid street market for gaming machines overall, but a less than satisfactory environment for the amusement game.

RECOGNISABLE new trends in North America seem to be suggesting a determination by operators to beat the in-home and tablet competition with major family attractions in their locations and if necessary undertaking some severe surgery to do it.

We are hearing reports of many tenpin bowling locations ripping up some of their lanes to install laser tag, soft play, more coin-op and mini-bowling, in an effort to widen their appeal. As the days of large-scale league bowling are ending – or at least being more limited – then the 36- and 48-lane bowling centres built in the 1970s and 1980s are no longer valid.

Better use of the space is resulting in a more broadly based offer in order to develop a destination with a multiplicity of choices for families.

There is evidence of the same at cinemas, with more mini-cinemas; smaller capacity theatres in groups to offer more choices. At the same time more space within foyers is being allocated to alternative entertainments, which includes attractions, fun elements and more F&B.

The other key elements in the North American sector include the further advance of the “barcade”, a return to the older-type locations but with the addition of adult F&B. This is an extension of the Dave & Buster’s format, returning to the old-fashioned arcade but adding on alcohol. It reduces the family appeal, but plays upon the theory that so many of today’s 30-somethings grew up with games through home consoles and would welcome a return to the forerunners of those games. Pinball, stand-up video games, Asteroids, Space Invaders and the rest of that genre, are all featuring strongly in this return to the old values.

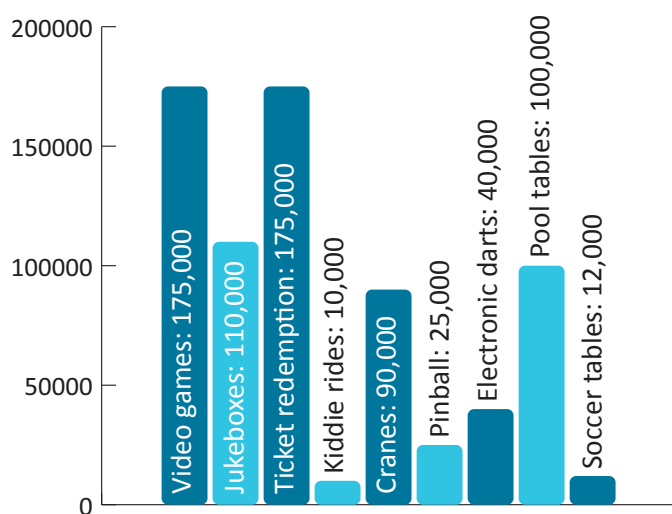

A barcade venue

The phenomenon of the barcade is not isolated. There has been a spread of them from New York to Chicago and to the extremes of the West, to Los Angeles and San Francisco, where the development is just as popular and acceptable to adults.

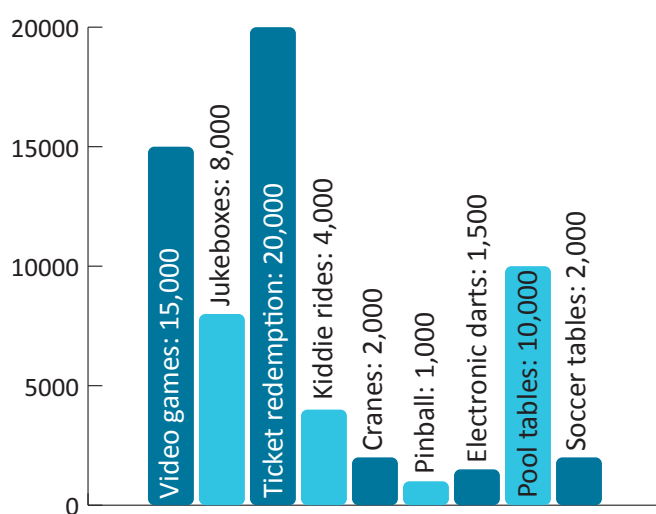

The market appears to have steadied after years of reduction and a period of limbo, with FECs holding their own well, mainly by widening their offer.

The business in North America’s hundreds of casinos, riverboat outlets, racetracks and VLTs has spread now to the majority of US states and it is felt to be only a matter of time before legislators currently holding out against gambling, surrender to the fiscal advantages. The long wait for the opening of the AWP/VLT style of street operating in Illinois continues to be a wait, as layer after layer of painful legal and administrative stumbling blocks are stripped away. Other states are likely to follow whatever the outcome.

BUREAUCRACY and import duties are the principal reasons why Latin America is not one of the primary geographical sectors for games and gaming as we enter 2015.

There is no sign of Brazil opening to gaming machines – again. Argentina has gone into financial freefall; but on the other hand we have seen rapid expansion in casinos and in amusement operations in Chile. Bolivia appears to be opening to casinos and a street market, Peru continues to be well regulated for gaming, Colombia is another stable market for gaming and Mexico has been a mix of cross-currents of gaming influences which may now be tidied up by a bill running through the legislature as this issue goes to press.

It isn't all bad, therefore, in Latin America. Although there are no signs of Venezuela returning to the gaming fold at this time, Panama continues to be a good business for both casinos and in the street market and many West Indian island nations are now capitalising on tourism with well-placed, well-regulated and well-financed casino resorts.

For the mainland countries, however, we still have mind-numbing degrees of red tape strangling any initiative to expand, coupled with almost impossible levels of import duty. These factors continue to make life very difficult for anyone hoping to see Latin America come into its own, either in the gambling or games businesses.

The Game Station FEC in Salvador, Bahia, Brazil

The latter sector is governed by family entertainment centres and there are some really good ones in the better shopping areas of the big cities, and some local assembly is assisting the stocking of these locations with more up-to-date content. The battle against home-based entertainment, however, is replicated here in Latin America and the growth of tablets and mobile gaming is a threat which must be met.

The biggest let-down for the gaming market is Argentina. The country has stumbled from one financial disaster to another and its substantial domestic casino business has been rocked by the failure of the national economy to the pitch where there is virtually no investment and hardly any new machines entering the country. The latter is also influenced by the necessity for a special import licence and they are proving almost impossible to come by.

WHEN it comes to a level of investment and a quality of installation, the Middle East probably now qualifies as the world's best family entertainment centre geographical sector. The sheer opulence of some of the FECs, which elevates many to effectively indoor air-conditioned theme parks, surpasses anything which can be seen anywhere else.

The numbers of games going into the region's centres are probably less than, for example, the annual installation in North America, but the quality of the locations and the ability and willingness to source and invest in the absolute best available, cannot be matched.

The Gulf states, led by Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, are the major drivers with the population and/or tourist numbers, plus the spending power of the people. Qatar, Bahrain, Oman and Kuwait are hardly far behind and this has been the pattern for several years.

What has been emerging is the powerhouse companies who are spending the money and spreading the word...Al Hokair and Al Othaim, the Saudi-based operators, and MAF and Landmark Leisure, the UAE-based companies. But none of them are restricted to their home territories. All of them are spreading over into each-others' countries. The result is a fiercely-contested battle for supremacy, which is good for the industry.

They are also taking the word into other countries in the region. Egypt, even Libya, are now seeing outlets bearing the brand names of these and other operators. Jordan too, the Lebanon, and even Syria and Iraq before internal conflict disrupted, destroyed or otherwise stalled development.

All of the operators are showing a real determination to spread their interests outside of their own countries and if it was not for political or civil unrest, the entire region would unquestionably become the favourite destination for all of the industry's suppliers.

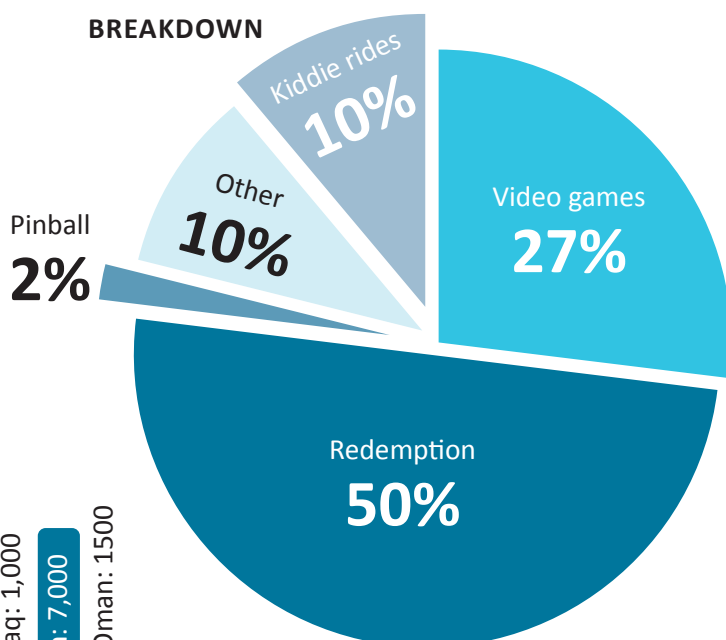

The success of the Middle East in amusements is perhaps the consequence of a total absence of any competition from gambling. Yes, Egypt has a dozen casinos, but they are all for foreigners and Lebanon has a world-famous casino, but does not otherwise impact the amusement industry. It is also the consequence of a financial ability to invest, led of course by the richness of natural resources.

That in turn has seen the rise of retail and the development of shopping emporiums of gorgeous quality – and FECs are regarded as an essential anchor ingredient. It all, therefore, merges and matches, dovetailing naturally into a formula for success.

COIN-OPERATED MACHINES BY COUNTRY

BREAKDOWN

The Timezone XTB redemption counter at Auckland

A CONTINENT which principally consists of Australia and New Zealand – also Papua New Guinea, but there is minor investment there for games and gaming – has continued to benefit from its strong dollars in the past year.

Australia has 13 casinos and widespread machine gaming in the street market, based upon the private members' clubs and pubs, throughout all of the states except Western Australia, where there is just one casino. New Zealand has six casinos and similarly strong gaming machines in street locations, but with charities the major beneficiaries.

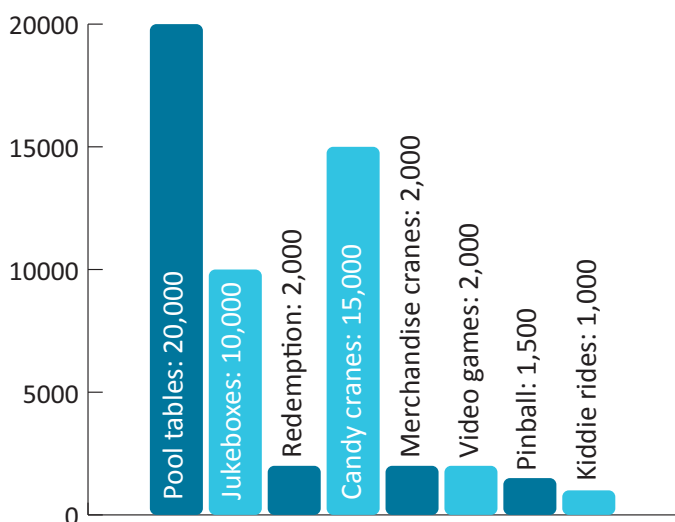

The amusement arcades industry is mostly – but not always – in the form of FECs and had declined in recent years in both countries, although has now stabilised. Australia has around 200 FECs, mostly contained in shopping centres, while New Zealand has considerably fewer. The trend in the past couple of years has seen FECs develop into larger locations of between 20,000 and 60,000sq.ft, which are now dominating the market.

New Zealand has around 15,000 amusement devices, with redemption and cranes the principal types of games, often in shopping centres or linked to tenpin bowling or fast food outlets. The industry in recent years in New Zealand has shown a tendency to polarise into larger but fewer units, as the traditional “mom and pop” outlets tend to dwindle and disappear.

There are around 200,000 gambling machines in Australia and nearly 20,000 in New Zealand, dominated by the big Australian manufacturers, Aristocrat and Ainsworth, but some of the American and Japanese makers also have well-established platforms in both countries.

FROM the very poor countries, where the main priority is feeding the people, to the wealthy where the main consideration is catching the public's disposable income, Africa remains the continent with the widest diversity, both for the gambling industry and for the amusements business.

The biggest sectors are at either end, geographically. South Africa has a thriving casino industry and a street market for gambling with what we refer to as AWP's, as well as a growing FEC sector. At the other end of the continent we have a politically troubled strip of countries along the Mediterranean coast, but which has the ability and the will to invest in games and gaming.

Egypt has its long-established dozen-or-so casinos for the foreign tourists and a huge potential for family entertainment centres driven by the upsurge in the number of shopping mall developments in the big cities. Against a background of civil unrest, this has continued to develop.

The Grandslots LPM location in the Western Cape, South Africa

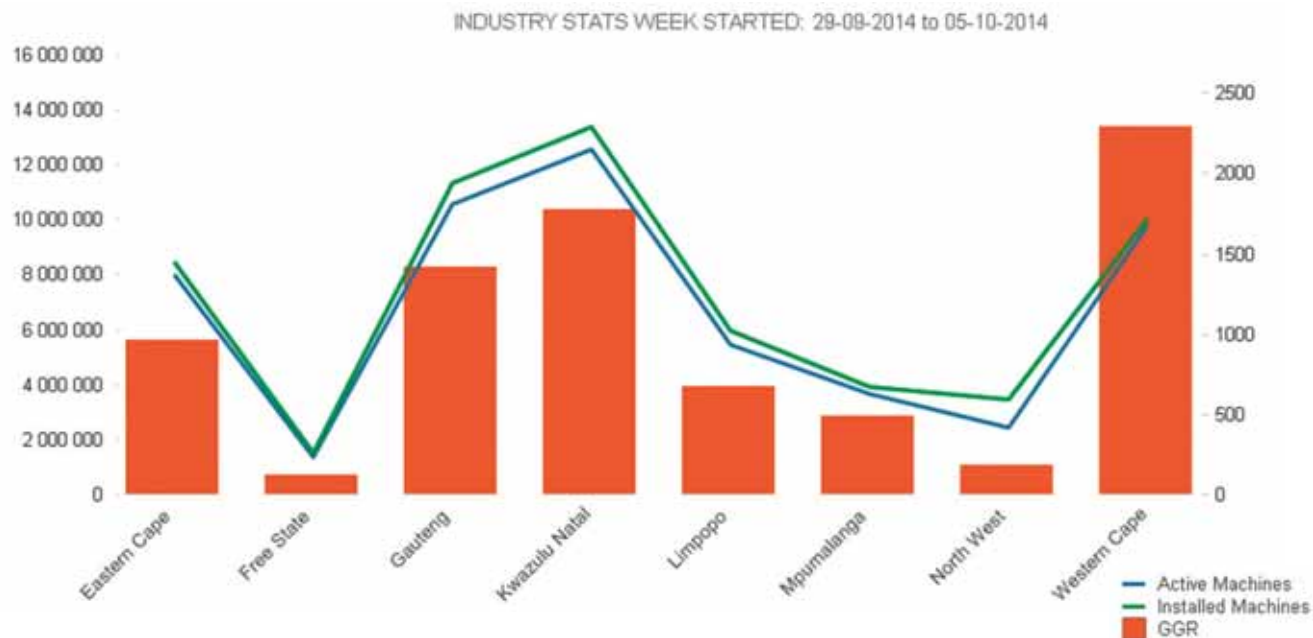

A Grand Gaming location in Gauteng, South Africa

Further along the coast, Libya was showing some grassroots for FECs, hampered by political infighting, but Tunisia has both casinos and amusement machines; so does Morocco and even Algeria with its strict policies is taking some development in amusement centres.

In between these two regions is a patchwork quilt of development. Even Congo is seeing some amusement centres, while Namibia is a microcosm of its larger neighbour, South Africa. Remaining in the south, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Lesotho, Uganda and Kenya are all to one degree or another home to some elements of games and gaming, the latter usually driven by one official casino. The one-casino element is a general rule across much of central Africa, sometimes two licences. The amusements in these areas are generally weak in quality and content, but still exist.

West Africa has long been a location for games and gaming. Countries like Togo, Burkina Faso, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Liberia, and further afield, Ivory Coast, Djibouti, Ethiopia and Sudan all now have elements of either games or gaming, or both.

THE past year has seen a patchwork of positives and negatives in the two sectors we cover, amusement and gaming. The gambling side of the industry has seen expansion in south-east Asia countries, Cambodia, Thailand, Vietnam, Laos and at the heart of the business is the world's largest jurisdiction, Macau.

Mainland China has not expanded the borders of its gambling experiment, and in fact has clamped down on illicit pusher machines and other amusement devices involving coins in and coins out.

The Philippines is seeing a reconstruction of its casino gambling, and Korea is considering it. Meanwhile, Japan has taken another step forward in the legitimising of casino gambling. The hopes for India remain faint in this regard, while much of the rest of the region has cultural and religious stumbling blocks which may be insurmountable, especially in the Islamic countries such as Pakistan and Indonesia.

The amusement industry has again been driven by China as the principal source of new ideas and most Western manufacturers of games now take their cues or even license games from Chinese manufacturers.

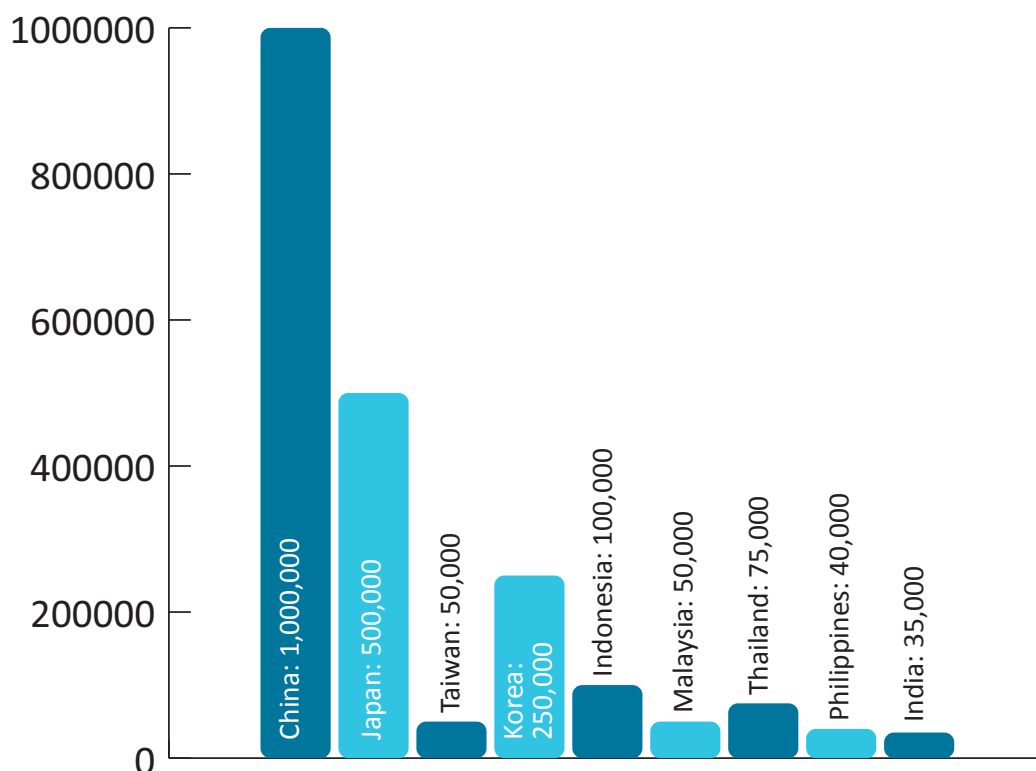

In terms of operations, the FEC continues to provide the backdrop for the expansion of games. The region is largely broken into three sectors: the mature markets,

Timezone Adrenaline located in Supermall Karawaci in Jakarta, Indonesia emerging and frontier. The mature business is in countries like Singapore and Japan where operators are fighting the influence of mobile games; the emerging comprises countries like India, Indonesia, Thailand and the Philippines, where intense competition exists; and the frontier is where the industry is only just beginning in real terms, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Vietnam and Myanmar and that is perhaps where the real potential lies.

A SIA continued to be the main hotspot for the international casino industry this year. Japan moved ever closer to legalisation, although there were several set-backs and delays.

Expansion continued in Vietnam and the Philippines with further new openings. There was also some movement towards extra casinos in South Korea and the first casinos in Taiwan.

Macau saw some backward movement over the summer and autumn months, mainly due to a clampdown on illegal money transfers by mainland China. A full smoking ban introduced in October didn't help either. However, analysts still believed that it was on track to more than double in size to $100bn a year by 2020.

Melco Crown's City of Dreams is due to get a new non-gaming attraction next year themed on London's Soho. It was also announced that MGM Cotai will supply "over 50 per cent" non-gaming entertainment. And SJM broke ground on its first resort on the Cotai Strip. The $3.9bn Lisboa Palace will have 700 gaming tables and 1,200 slot machines.

Galaxy Entertainment announced it will spend around US$9bn on the next three phases of Galaxy Macau. It was also announced that the Macau Jockey Club was planning to reopen its casino after a 10-year absence.

Wynn Macau's Wynn Palace on the Cotai Strip is on track to open in the first half of 2016.

In Singapore, Las Vegas Sands asked the authorities for more land to increase rooms at its Marina Bay Sands resort by about 60 per cent after facing almost full occupancy.

In the Philippines, Universal Entertainment broke ground on its $2bn Tiger casino resort in Manila. The resort, in Manila's Entertainment City is due to open in 2015. It was also announced that Bloomberry plans to more than double the scope of its new Solaire resort in Entertainment City.

Banyan Tree Holdings received approval from the Vietnamese government to open a casino within its Laguna Lang Co resort in Thua Thien-Hue. Seven casinos - open only to foreigners - have been licensed in Vietnam since 1992. However, the government is now considering allowing locals to play.

In South Korea, the competition to obtain casino licences in Yeongjongdo, an economic zone near Incheon International Airport that Korea is hoping to turn into a high-end casino city, heated up again.

Paradise City, a joint venture between Paradise Co and Sega Sammy Holdings, also broke ground in October. It is set to open near the airport at Incheon in early 2017, a full year ahead of the Caesars project. Las Vegas Sands was also hoping to get in on the act.

Also, Landing International Development and Genting Singapore entered into a joint venture to develop and operate an integrated resort on Korea's Jeju island.

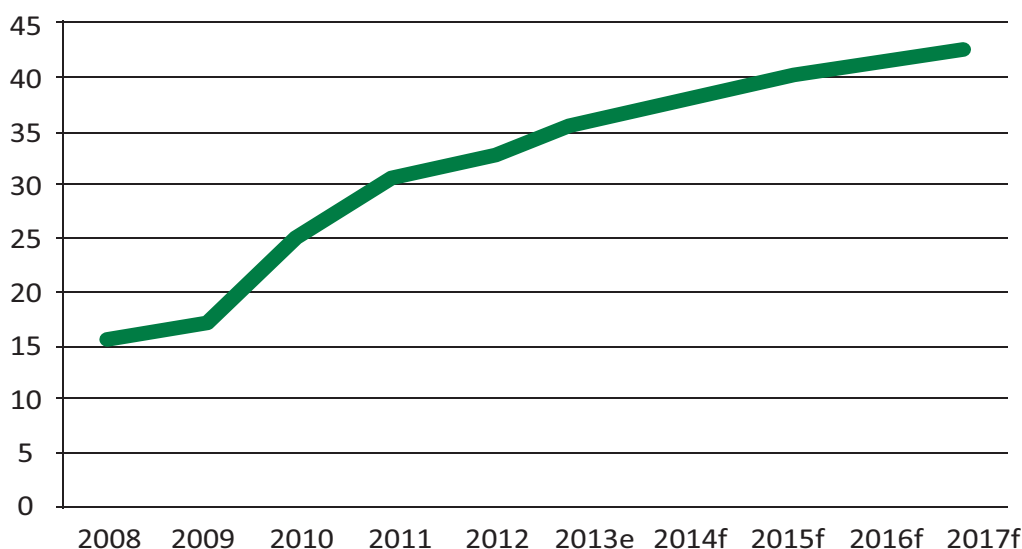

Early in the year Japan's lawmakers from the ruling Liberal Democratic Party submitted a bill to legalise casinos. Analysts think Japan could be "the next Macau," generating $40bn a year in gaming revenues by 2025.

James Packer made his most public pitch yet to build a US$400m casino resort in Sri Lanka. In a speech to delegates at the Commonwealth Business Forum in capital Colombo he said such a resort is a necessity if the country is to achieve its tourism potential.

In Nepal, the government declared all casinos in the country illegal and ordered them to close. Then a couple of months later it said they could reopen after become concerned about an estimated 10,000 lost jobs.

It was announced that Genting may not remain the only casino operator in Malaysia. Billionaire Vincent Tan is proposing a $933m casino in the state of Pahang.

Resorts World, Birmingham, UK

THERE are still promising casino gaming markets within Europe, despite ongoing economic and regulatory challenges. According to the European Casino Association's European Casino Industry Report, the results gave a rather mixed picture for the European casino industry.

Excluding the UK, which is not one of the organisation's members, total gaming revenues among the ECA's 23 countries reached €6.58bn. This figure was 6.5 per cent down on the previous year. Tellingly, 80 per cent of that total was generated by just eight countries – all of which reported year-on-year falls in gaming revenue.

Yet, despite the majority of the industry experiencing continuing difficulties brought about by the economic downturn, the introduction of smoking bans and competition from online and other forms of gambling, there were positive signs of growth.

Hungary, where slots have been banned anywhere outside its casinos, saw revenue increase 32 per cent, while operators in the UK recorded a 9.4 per cent jump in revenue to £872m (£1.035bn) and a record number of visitors.

Elsewhere, Poland made a significant recovery with revenues increasing 15 per cent, while both Estonia and Lithuania saw revenue rise around eight per cent. Finland, Sweden and Denmark also showed notable improvements, with the latter experiencing a 7.1 per cent uplift in slots win, for example.

There were some notable events during 2014. Casino Sopron, Casinos Austria International's popular casino in the Hungarian border town of Sopron, was relocated to new larger premises. Gaming giant Novomatic acquired the Casino at Ocean Village in Gibraltar.

Genting started the construction of the US$247.5m Resorts World Birmingham casino, which will be the largest venue in the UK. It is one of the eight large casinos which have been approved by the British government for cities around the country and will be the first of the lucrative Genting Resorts World casino franchise to open in Europe.

Casinos Poland successfully launched a casino in Poznan, Poland. This was relocated from an unfavourable location to the four-star Andersia hotel. Having obtained a new owner, it was announced that the Casino de Venezia in Malta could reopen before the end of 2014. Four new casinos were announced for Hungary, also before the end of the year, while casino licences in Cyprus should be expected by spring 2015, according to the government there.

Novomatic was granted permission to build two casinos in its domestic market, Austria, and Grosvenor opened a new casino in Southend, UK.

Internationally established

RFRANCO Group is a leading Spanish manufacturer of AWP's, casino slots and bingo machines.

The company is internationally established in markets as diverse as Norway, the UK, Mexico and Argentina to name but a few. The R Franco philosophy and working methods are all about searching for and developing products which meet customers' needs and requirements within a mutual and on-going co-operation framework, always including the most advanced technological developments and applications in each of its wide range of games.

Based on its experience, commitment and innovation the R. Franco Group has an extensive portfolio of games with high performance levels and the guaranteed quality they have always had, supported by a huge corporate project which remains faithful to its principles and retains all its commitment and closeness to its clients.

One of its most successful recent products that results from its creativity, talent and technology is Tombola Roulette, a game which sees the use of a bingo card to place bets and a physical mechanism, a lottery drum, that provides the balls, which act as roulette chips with printed numbers.

There are two payment options – single zero and double zero cloth. There is also a player selectable minimum chip value for placing bets and an on-screen quick bet utility. The machine has full bet, repeat bet and cancel last bet buttons and comes with an 8.4ins monitor to display game statistics.

The first European installation of Tombola Roulette took place in the Hippodrome Casino in London in 2013. Before The Hippodrome opened its doors, the owners were adamant that they would be innovative with their gaming proposition, embracing technology that would enable them to offer a unique central London casino.

Tombola Roulette is a key part of the Hippodrome's gaming floor and fits perfectly with the approach of the casino's owners. Hippodrome owner Simon Thomas says that part of the reason for their success is because they fill a gap in the UK market. "Tombola Roulette machines are increasingly popular.

"The product fills a gap in the market; there's a huge demand in the market, clearly, for fast roulette games, which currently only bookmakers can provide because they can have an electronic random number generator. That means they can have a game cycle of just 20 seconds; in a casino, with an actual traditional wheel, to get a random result you're talking about a much longer game cycle.

"By using the Tombola Roulette - which instead of having 37 pockets and one ball has 37 balls and one pocket and produces exactly the same result as a roulette wheel - it has a materially quicker game cycle, of about 20 seconds.

"I recently came back from Madrid to see R Franco and the product has seen sufficient success to enjoy further development and investment.

There is a 23ins widescreen model being produced as we speak, as opposed to the current 19ins screen; the 23ins is more comparable to other roulette cabinets out there."

SIC BO, based on the successful Chinese game with three physical drums with three dices is the latest state-of-the-art game that incorporates the latest technology along with an attractive fully random game.

Monticello Casino, Chile

SOUTH America has long been regarded by the international casino community as second only to Asia in terms of future potential and there was plenty of activity there in 2014.

Healthy industries in countries such as Argentina, Chile, Colombia and Peru keep both operators and suppliers busy. Clarity of regulation does vary from nation to nation, but progress has been made in this area over the past couple of decades.

In Argentina, in keeping with the government's interventionist approach, last year the Argentine tax agency initiated a crackdown on the country's gaming sector. It said it wanted to create a "register and information system with respect to the operations of games of chance and betting with the purpose of "deepening fiscal control related to the income generated by the industry."

The measure applied to casinos, bingo halls and bets placed via the internet, mobile phones and landlines, but did not apply to racetracks, lotteries or raffles. However, there is hope in the gaming industry that a possible change of government next year will lead to more market-friendly policies. There are 77 casinos in Argentina.

In Chile the country's ACCJ Casino Association blamed a 20 per cent decline in tax transfers from the sector to municipal and regional governments in the second quarter partly on illegal slot parlours. The association represents Chile's 17 privately operated casinos that were licensed under the 2005 casino law.

Gross win in 2012 from the 17 privately operated casinos of $595m made Chile South America's second biggest casino market, surpassed only by Argentina and edging Colombia into third place. Despite predicted slower growth this and next year, Price Waterhouse Cooper's Global Gaming Outlook sees the figure reaching $765 in 2015.

The seven casino concessions issued under municipal legislation are due to expire at the end of 2015, when they will face renewal under the terms of the 2005 law.

Colombia has 23 casinos which are forecast to rake in revenues of over $600m next year, which would be up on the $548m taken last year. Casino gambling was legalised in 1943 and in 1977 and 1978, presidential decrees reinforced their legality. However, even though industry analysts say that the country has greater potential, gaming investors face some hurdles.

Compared with other countries in South America, operating contracts are short - between three and five years - and there are no limits on the number of casinos that can operate in a certain region. It is also felt that inadequate regulations are holding the industry back.

Peru has 48 casinos and is catching the attention of foreign casino operators due to its buoyant economy and clear regulations. "The Peruvian market combines adequate legislation on gaming, real respect for the law and great potential for growth," said Claudio Tessada of operator Dreams.

Peru, along with Colombia, is a bright spot in the Andean region, where several countries have closed the door to gaming. Neighbouring Venezuela and Ecuador have virtually banned casinos, while Bolivia has awarded just two licences since it started closing hundreds of illegal gaming parlours under a 2011 law.

There are 18 casinos in Uruguay, the majority of which are run by the state. It is a stable country but it does have an ongoing problem with illegal gaming. The state casino board has expressed impatience with the government for failing to pass a law to tackle this.

Among proposals languishing in parliament is a bill to register and set profit limits on an estimated 20,000 slot machines operating illegally in shops and clubs. The casinos and legal slot parlours complain that this is unfair competition. Having said that, most of the private casino operators say the wider regulations covering Uruguay's gaming industry inspire confidence.

There are just six casinos in Paraguay, which has a population of around 6.5 million. The relative strength of its currency, the guarani, is leading to increased investment in the gaming industry. "The guarani is worth something now so slot machine revenue has gone up in dollar terms," said Ed Roberts, an Argentine who manufactures and distributes casino equipment such as gaming tables, layouts and chips.

THERE has been plenty of activity in the North American gaming market during 2014. Slow but steady progress was made towards establishing casinos in the states of New York and Massachusetts (although this was thrown into limbo by the possibility of a ballot to overturn a 2011 decision to allow casinos) and Las Vegas continued its revival.

The year began though with opposition to a plan for a casino on tribal land on the Massachusetts island of Martha's Vineyard, a popular destination for summer holiday-makers. Residents, who number just 15,000 in the off-season (this swells to around 115,000 in the summer), had mixed feelings about a casino on the island.

New York licences will be issued toward the end of 2014. Governor Andrew Cuomo said the expansion of the state's gaming industry was a way to increase revenue and create jobs, especially in struggling parts of upstate New York. Which is why the first four of the five casinos will be situated there.

Further south, the Mississippi Gaming Commission approved the development of the $250m Scarlet Pearl Casino Resort at D'Iberville. The venue is due to open in 2015 and will accommodate 1,350 slot machines and 40 gaming tables.

The news was not so good in Atlantic City, where several casinos closed this year. The first was the Atlantic Club, followed by the Showboat, Trump Plaza and Revel. A growing number of state leaders were calling for New Jersey to go "all in" on a new gambling complex at Meadowlands sports complex following Atlantic City's decline in casino revenues. There were also plans for a casino across the river from New York City – if the law was changed to allow casinos in the state outside Atlantic City.

In Maryland, the state's sixth casino was awarded to MGM Resorts International. The company is planning a luxury casino hotel at National Harbor in Prince George's County, on the doorstep of Washington DC. The casino is not permitted to open any sooner than mid-2016.

In Florida, Genting Resorts World teamed up with a racetrack for a proposed slots-only project. Resorts World Miami would use a licence held by Gulfstream Park to open a facility in Miami's Biscayne Bay, offering 2,000 slots, poker and off-track betting. Casino plans were also proposed for Miami-Dade and Broward counties.

In Las Vegas, Caesars Entertainment opened the Linq Hotel and Casinos, a rebranding of the Quad Resort and Casino. James Packer's Crown Resorts pressed ahead with plans for a Las Vegas resort, having acquired land on the Strip previously occupied by the New Frontier casino. The SLS Hotel and Casino (formerly the Sahara) also opening on the Strip during the summer.

The US state of Kansas is also accepting applications for a casino and work began on the Cherokee's newest casino just south of the Kansas state line in Oklahoma.

Also in 2014, the American Gaming Association carried out a nationwide survey which revealed that Americans view casinos as they would any other business in their communities. The AGA is expected to use the findings in a public awareness campaign for the industry.

In Canada the city of Richmond received an unexpected $5m windfall from River Rock Casino, British Columbia's top gambling and entertainment destination. Richmond had budgeted to receive $12m in gambling revenue but instead took a record $17.6m.

Elsewhere, a development permit with conditions was issued to Paragon Gaming to build an urban resort, including a casino, in downtown Vancouver.

In Mexico, President Enrique Peña Nieto took the first step towards moving the country's gaming business out of the shadows and into the international mainstream. He added and repealed various provisions of the existing law to "clean up the house" and stimulate gaming expansion.

A bill legalising casinos in Mexico and possibly leading to integrated resorts in Cancun and Los Cabos will be unveiled soon. The bill would allow for a 10-year licence and one 10-year renewal.

Echo Jupiters Casino, Australia

N Australia, the race between developers to secure one of three Queensland casino licences got under way. Expression of interest documents were issued to parties wishing to develop integrated resorts across the state.

The government reported strong interest from both local and foreign bidders. It sees Queensland as a place to compete with the likes of Macau and the Philippines in luring high-end Asian spenders. The country's existing 13 casinos currently capture just one per cent of the $34bn market for high rollers in Asia annually.

A total of 19 companies registered to make a potential bid, 12 of whom were looking at a development in central Brisbane. The remaining seven potential bidders have expressed an interest in developments in regional Queensland.

Crown Resorts, Echo Entertainment, Chow Tai Fook Enterprises and Greenland Investment were invited to submit detailed proposals for the Queen's Wharf Brisbane project.

Hong Kong property developer Tony Fung gained government backing for a casino resort in Cairns. He stated that Cairns is "set to rival Macau," adding: "This is the closest western city to China." Fung also bought the existing Reef casino in Cairns for $217m.

Work began on Fiji's first-ever casino, One Hundred Sands, which is expected to open in mid-2015. And, after several unsuccessful years, Saipan (an island in the Northern Marianas) passed a bill legalising casinos.

Imperial Pacific, a Hong Kong-based investment company, plans to invest $7bn to build a casino on Saipan. The resort complex would have over 4,000 hotel rooms and its opening is planned for 2020. The island is a four-hour flight from Shanghai.

Samoa opened its first casino in Mulifanua, near the international airport. The Prime Minister said the casino would create job opportunities and attract more tourists into the country.

Windmill Casino, South Africa

T was announced early on in the year that Cape Town, South Africa's second largest city, could be in line for another casino. The bidding process is expected to get under way in 2015. The Western Cape province has five casinos in total.

Two new casinos were opened by Tani Hanna's Games World International in Equatorial Guinea. El Barco Casino in Malabo was the first to open, followed quickly by Game Joker Casino in Bata.

Both casinos have the latest equipment, including Cammegh roulette wheels, Shuffle Master chip sorting machines and the REAC cashless online slot system. The company was planning another casino in Sierra Leone, but that was before the ebola crisis.

A South African casino operator took the unusual step of creating its own dedicated radio station. The Garden Route Casino in Mossel Bay launched Garden Route Radio, which airs daily throughout the complex. The station features its own DJs who interact with casino guests and keep them up to date with upcoming events and promotions.

Sun International got the go-ahead to build a three billion rand entertainment complex in the Pretoria area. The company, which shut down another casino in the region, will build a casino, hotel, conference centre and a concert hall in an affluent part of the city. It will take around three years to complete.

Sun also decided to sell its interests in Botswana, Zambia, Lesotho, Namibia and Swaziland to Minor International for R664m (US$62.7m). Sun will continue to manage the casino operations in these countries with Minor taking over day-to-day management of the hotel operations.

This will exclude Zambia, which will be jointly managed by the two companies. The deal allows Sun to remain interested in its African assets with responsibility only in the casino component of the businesses.

Altered states

F the last 12 months has taught the online real-money gaming sector anything it is that, in this industry, predictions count for very little.

It is true that few would have denied that the 2014 FIFA World Cup in Brazil would be anything but a revenue booster for sportsbooks - and mobile was expected to play a major part.

As a new year dawns, the reality is that the combined power of Brazil 2014 and the at times staggering growth in mobile wagering gave balance sheets a welcome boost.

MOBILE

The explosion in mobile proved a welcome distraction for some chief executives and might even have saved one or two heads from rolling in the boardroom.

It can come as no surprise – Facebook has been open about its mobile-first strategy for more than a year and the growth in second-screen sports betting clearly relies heavily on mobile and tablet use. The aspect of the mobile boom that has surprised many is its sheer scale.

“In 2006, mobile wagering accounted for less than five per cent of global online gaming revenues totalling around $1bn. In 2017, it is forecast that mobile will contribute $12bn to i-gaming revenues, making up nearly 24 per cent of the total interactive market”
(GBGC Global Gaming Report).

In 2006, mobile wagering accounted for less than five per cent of global online gaming revenues totalling around $1bn. In 2017, it is forecast that mobile will contribute $12bn to i-gaming revenues, making up nearly 24 per cent of the total interactive market (GBGC Global Gaming Report).

However, some operators are making those forecasts seem very conservative. Throughout 2014, a number of high profile gambling and sports betting companies have reported year-on-year mobile growth of more than 100 per cent.

William Hill has posted an increase of 116 per cent in mobile, Ladbrokes 133 per cent, bwin.party 125 per cent and 32Red 124 per cent. Elsewhere, Paddy Power now takes more than half of its bets from mobile devices while for Betfair mobile now accounts for 70 per cent of sportsbook revenues.

Even in the B2B sector, growth has been clear. At Net Entertainment, mobile revenues climbed 16.5 per cent in Q3 2014, compared with the same period in 2013.

If the overall mobile trend is obvious, precise figures can be harder to come by. Researchers at MECN point to inconsistencies in the key performance indicators deployed in reporting mobile revenues. Taking a view across the industry, MECN estimates that mobile revenues now make up 29 per cent of total online gaming revenue – already ahead of GBGC’s 2017 forecast.

The global regulated online gaming sector was worth $40bn in 2013, according to GBGC. That is around nine per cent of all GGY in the combined global gaming sector. GBGC predicts online will grow by another quarter by 2017, to approximately $50bn - although that will still represent around 9.4 per cent of the all revenues as the global gaming sector continues to grow at a similar pace.

Of the $40bn GGY in 2013, sports betting comprised 48.3 per cent while casino was around 19 per cent.

POKERSTARS

Poker may account for just 11 per cent but the game still manages to generate a lot of headlines, not least with the most eye-catching deal of 2014: Amaya Gaming's $4.9bn acquisition of Rational Group, the parent company of the world's two leading online poker brands, PokerStars and Full Tilt Poker.

PokerStars and Full Tilt are together the world's most popular online poker businesses, boasting more than 85 million registered players between them.

David Baazov, CEO of Amaya, said the deal was "a transformative acquisition" for the Montreal-based company.

David Baazov, the chairman and CEO of Amaya, which acquired PokerStars and Full Tilt Poker for $4.9bn in 2014

The all-cash acquisition took many in the industry by surprise and left a few of Amaya's traditional B2B competitors stunned by its sheer audacity. Baazov (pictured) now heads the world's largest online gaming company.

NEW JERSEY

High on the Amaya CEO's to-do list was to open discussions with the New Jersey Division of Gaming Enforcement about PokerStars and/or Full Tilt re-entering the US market with a licence to offer online poker in the Garden State.

The sale (to Amaya) saw those PokerStars executives with outstanding US indictments leaving the company, a move Amaya hopes will clear the way for PokerStars to enter the New Jersey market, having been previously excluded.

"We've had discussions with Amaya to reactivate the application," said David Rebeck, director of the New Jersey DGE, speaking in August 2014. "We'll look at whatever they bring over." He said he was "encouraged" by the sale and the licensing talks.

"I think in the long run it will be a good story for New Jersey. I'm optimistic that they know what the rules are, and I fully expect them to be very aggressive because they want to be here."

W Hotel, Barcelona, which once again hosted the World Gaming Executive Summit

At the World GES in Barcelona in July 2014, the nascent US online gaming industry was under the microscope with many asserting the comparatively low revenues in the more populous state of New Jersey (compared with the smaller Delaware and Nevada) were an indication of a struggling market. Others were quick to defend the performance of the New Jersey i-gaming industry.

Bill Pascrell III, attorney and partner with the influential Princeton Public Affairs Group, said the DGE “had done a superb job of launching [online gaming] in a very short period of time.”

Countering suggestions that revenues had fallen embarrassingly short of forecasts, Pascrell added: “The fact that the analysts are measuring New Jersey based on political numbers generated in an election year is unfortunate... The numbers were all too generous, too political and badly reported.

“Once PokerStars enters the New Jersey market it will require every other operator to step up their game.”

The figures for regulated online gaming in the three US states have been steady if unspectacular but New Jersey, with its population of nearly nine million - more than Israel or Austria - is as close as the US has to a barometer for i-gaming stateside. Six authorised operators – each with a land-based casino presence in Atlantic City – run a total of 14 regulated sites.

Online gaming revenues in New Jersey in 2014 will surpass the $100m mark with the Borgata online operation (on the bwin.party platform) leading the market with around a third of overall revenues.

Delaware, which has a population of just under 900,000 (2010), amassed revenues of $1.8m from online poker during the period November 2013 to September 2014.

Nevada meanwhile has been offering online poker since April 2013 but has only been reporting monthly figures since February 2014. Monthly revenues have been around $800,000 to $1m with online poker representing approximately eight per cent of the total poker revenues in the state. It is interesting to note that in New Jersey, online gaming accounts for just five per cent of the total gaming revenue.

According to research published by UNLV in September 2014, the regulated online gaming industry in the US is worth about $12m a month. New Jersey dominates the market with around 90 per cent of the revenue.

In the fledgling US online gaming market, the opportunities of scale offered by the sheer size of New Jersey have been a driver in developing a high functioning, tightly regulated real-money online gaming sector. Growth is modest but, as Pascrell and others are quick to point out, it is steady and at least as good as can be expected in a new regulated market.

Legislators in New Jersey hope that the Garden State's model for regulation can be a blueprint for introducing online gaming in other states. Quite where that will happen next is unclear. New York and California appear frequently in predictions of the next states to regulate but that may just be wishful thinking based on the size of the potential markets. Illinois, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts are all candidates but, as witnessed to date, progress can be slow.

And of course there remains some vociferous opposition, not least from Las Vegas Sands magnate Sheldon Adelson, although few in the online gaming industry seem to be taking his campaign against i-gaming with anything other than a pinch of salt. Adelson retains considerable power in the global casino industry and on Capitol Hill but to date his arguments have been regarded by some as muddled and incoherent. There may be a potentially powerful anti-online lobby in the US casino industry but there are equally enthusiastic advocates for i-gaming too. To date, there has been nothing to suggest that Adelson or anyone else will enjoy any significant success in holding back the tide.

It can be slow – moving i-gaming forward in a new market like the US – but it is a complex business, rich with the kind of careful legislation and due diligence that makes a mockery of assertions that the i-gaming sector is somehow reckless in its approach.

In any case, it seems the online gaming industry likes to be underestimated.

CONTINENTAL DIVIDES

Away from the US, there were significant shifts in the regulatory landscape in the established European online gaming market. The Netherlands has moved to regulate online gaming and Germany continues to wrestle with the issue.

The most highly developed of online gaming jurisdictions, the UK, provided the European industry's biggest shake-up as it sought to implement a point-of-consumption licensing system that means offshore operators, even those in white-listed or "top tier" overseas jurisdictions would need to obtain a licence from the UK Gambling Commission to offer or advertise its services in the country.

The regime, implemented under the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014, shakes up the traditional order and unsurprisingly found some vociferous opposition, not least among the online gaming community in Gibraltar.

The Gibraltar Betting and Gaming Association sought – and obtained – a judicial review of the 2014 Act. In his judgment following the review proceedings brought by the GBGA, Mr Justice Green stated that the point-of-consumption licensing regime is: "...neither disproportionate, nor discriminatory, nor is it irrational."

In what he called "a clear cut case", Green rejected the GBGA's claim that the act infringed EU or domestic law.

"...The new regime serves a series of legitimate objectives," he said in the 96-page judgment. "There is no reason to doubt parliament's judgement that it will achieve a reasonable degree of effectiveness and there is no proper basis for concluding that it is or will be discriminatory in its effects."

"Further, I reject the submission that the new regime will create perverse incentives and lead to the creation of an illicit market of unscrupulous service providers."

The UK Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014 came into force on November 1, 2014.

Elsewhere in Europe, Denmark saw its online gambling regime endorsed by the EU while in neighbouring Sweden, the online gaming community was left reeling after the European Commission took two separate decisions to refer the country to the Court of Justice of the EU.

Sweden was referred to the CJEU for imposing restrictions on the organisation and promotion of online betting and online poker services in a way that is inconsistent with EU law, the EC said in a statement.

In Spain meanwhile, changes to i-gaming regulations are expected to help licensed operators compete with a still vibrant unregulated market. "The regulated industry in Spain still faces significant challenges, since the unregulated offer remains a reality and constitutes a tempting alternative for Spanish players," Albert Agustinoy, partner with DLA Piper in Madrid, told InterGame.

In Asia – still a powerhouse of bricks-and-mortar casino gambling – online gaming is largely confined to the margins, with many thriving unregulated markets. Singapore's Remote Gambling Bill offers a glimmer of hope, even if its intention is to outlaw i-gaming. In October, Singapore's parliament passed a bill to ban online gambling, although exemptions are to be permitted.

Under the law, applicants applying for an online gambling licence are required to meet strict criteria: they must be based in Singapore, be not for profit, contribute to a social cause, and have a good compliance track record. The not-for-profit requirement is not usually an attractive factor for mainstream i-gaming operators.

In the Americas, Grenada began the process of regulation for casino gambling while Mexico sought to update its 70-year-old gambling laws – neither moves relate directly to online gaming but both would open the door to potential future i-gaming markets.

If the US is looking to New Jersey as a model for i-gaming regulation, then perhaps it should look north too – the Canadian i-gaming market is difficult to ignore.

British Columbia was the first province to offer regulated i-gaming, followed by Quebec and Manitoba. The British Columbia Lottery Corporation has even established an inter-province agreement with Lotto-Quebec to share liquidity and offer peer-to-peer poker.

In the five years to 2014, i-gaming revenues in British Columbia have risen almost threefold. It is a quiet – and typically Canadian – success story and, for an impatient US i-gaming lobby, it is a model of managed expectation and commercial success.

SHOW TIME

To some extent, G2E Las Vegas provides an annual snapshot of the US online gaming market. Anyone attending the vast event at the Sands Convention Center could be forgiven for thinking that i-gaming was little more than a thorn in the side of a strong land-based casino industry.

There is an i-gaming section at G2E with a few big names present but the headlines – and the major presence at the show - still belong to the heavy-hitters from the casino world.

But scratch beneath the surface and a different story begins to emerge. The booths at G2E play host to just a few of the online gaming industry's headline acts but the floor is quietly awash with representatives from across the i-gaming sector; empire builders in the land of opportunity, awaiting a gold rush. As we have seen in New Jersey, there will be no hasty revolution for online gaming in the US but instead an “overnight success” many years in the making.

Consider ICE. Not too long ago, the London show was essentially a land-based gaming show with a band of hopeful online gaming entrepreneurs on the fringes. In 2015, ICE is the show in the online gaming calendar.

There is no suggestion that i-gaming has pushed “traditional” casino gambling to one side at the event but ICE is something of a model of co-existence for the broader gaming industry. The result is the biggest show of the year; a pulsating carnival of noise and colour. Established names line-up alongside the ballsy start-ups as the floor floods with developers, buyers, designers, lawyers, venture capitalists, owners, operators, affiliates and even the occasional journalist.

ICE continues to grow, in both size and reputation, and as such it is a fitting shop window for an online gaming industry that grows ever wiser, ever smarter. Yes, the industry would benefit from a little more collaboration - from a “single voice”, especially when approaching new markets such as the US - but it remains a business community that just won't take “no” for an answer.

At the cutting edge

SOFTSWISS has been in existence since 2008 but hit the market with its gambling solutions in 2012.

CEO and co-owner Ivan Montik said: "We were confident in our technical skills since we had much experience already in software development on different levels and we knew how to build cutting-edge new gaming platforms and create sophisticated games. Using the latest IT features we implemented stable, secure and fast turnkey online casino solutions.

"Our plans were too pessimistic from the start and we are happy to see such positive results today. Our bitcoin casino solution turned out to be the first and the best on the market and we became famous worldwide very fast."

Launching its real-money white label solution was a major milestone for SoftSwiss. "Obtaining gaming licences, opening merchant accounts and payment systems were the most complicated issues for us. We understand our clients who tried to do it by themselves and are happy to offer our white label solution to new clients to make their start fast and smooth."

SoftSwiss has three key products – the white label turnkey online casino solution, turnkey bitcoin casino solution and SoftSwiss Casino Games for desktop and mobile devices. The company works globally and has customers from all over the world. Currently it has customers in Asia, Europe, Russia, Latin America and North America. "We are just missing Africa but we will enter this market as well," said Montik, whose co-owner is CTO Dmitry Yaikov.

"We try to be flexible for our customers and deliver high-end product quality. We should know every detail of the industry to be able to help our customers in all areas. The client is king at SoftSwiss and our personnel is a key platform here.

"We already work with some of the biggest customers in the world that any company could dream about like Princess Casino International Group and we look forward to making further big steps. But we also want to open bitcoin gaming to all the industry and make our position stronger.

"Beside casino solutions, we are also working in the e-commerce industry as a trading and auction platform provider and cryptocurrency exchange platform provider. We recently launched a big gaming portal, www.newsandscore.com, and a unique tax lien online trading project, www.taxliendealer.com."

NOVOMATIC and GREENTUBE: A rich heritage

THE past year has repeatedly proven that Novomatic's industry expertise and Greentube's excellent technology make a winning combination. Looking back on our goals for the year, 2014 brought Greentube great results and next year we will strive still further to exceed the expectations of our customers and business partners.

One of the biggest event highlights was undoubtedly ICE in London, the world's largest and most comprehensive gaming industry trade show. Following Greentube's successful attendance at ICE 2013, we were delighted to exhibit in 2014 as an integral part of the Novomatic stand; something that we also successfully did at the recent G2E in Las Vegas.

This summer, Greentube made headlines when it signed a deal to acquire Bingocams – one of the most popular and innovative online bingo platforms - from Dazzletag Entertainment. This partnership represents a major step forward, expanding our large portfolio, which is backed by Novomatic's rich heritage and know-how.

Greentube, as an interactive unit of Novomatic, is continuously expanding its i-gaming portfolio. We are very excited to create and pioneer future trends in the casino industry and in 2015 we are certain to continue reaching our goals and surprising our business partners and players with innovative solutions. Supported by Novomatic, we are certain that we will reach new targets by offering unique content. We will continue developing classic Novomatic games for mobile and tablet platforms, boosting the offer with content from other Novomatic subsidiaries such as Astra Games, Mazooma, JvH, iGaming2Go and more.

Our direction on the road ahead is clear: Greentube will continue to create and develop new innovative methods to differentiate ourselves and stand out from the crowd.

As the industry leader in delivering trendsetting gaming entertainment solutions, Greentube looks forward to once again exhibiting and networking at ICE 2015 in London. The Greentube team will be proud to present the company's latest gaming solutions for online and mobile. The ICE show is an excellent opportunity to have many interesting discussions with our business partners, guests and visitors to our stand. Greentube will again be integrated into the Novomatic booth and cannot wait to present a new stand design surrounded by partner companies of the Novomatic Group.

As an industry leading group of companies, we are offering content channels and, whether we present that as a land-based machine or deliver directly to mobile: the same experience determined by player preference.

Greentube is Novomatic's online brand, bridging the land-based and online/mobile space. Our function is to develop amazing Novomatic content, renowned throughout international markets, and to deliver that experience in the virtual space. Greentube takes pride in presenting superb quality in today's competitive market. In terms of geographic spread, the range of the Novomatic games library extends to all corners of the globe, with games suited to every market and player requirement.

A key player

YB: How has Betradar developed over the years and what have been the major milestones along the way?

“Since its founding in 2001, Betradar has developed into a key player providing all necessary data for bookmakers, such as fixtures, results, odds compiling, monitoring and in-running services, front-end content solutions like statistics and live scores, as well as innovative virtual sports betting solutions and live betting games,” said Sportradar’s director of marketing operations, Tobias Brunner.

“Betradar provides live betting data for more than 15,000 events per month. This can only be achieved by an international group set-up with its headquarters in St. Gallen, Switzerland, and numerous data partnerships with international sporting federations, such as the ITF since 2012. This partnership entitles Betradar the access to over 50,000 tennis matches per year. Through the acquisition of SportStat, a UK-based sports data provider, which specialises in darts, snooker and rugby, the data portfolio has once again been expanded. The latest acquisition of SportsData, a US-based sports data provider offering real-time sports data products, will support the continued expansion of our comprehensive and reliable sports data services to become a truly global supplier of sports and betting related content.”

What are your key products?

“Being the one-stop shop provider for the betting industry, Betradar approaches clients in a holistic manner. Thanks to a broad variety of products we can supply bookmakers with everything they need for creating and managing their sports betting offer. Our Betting Solutions ensure exactly this and help bookmakers to succeed in an increasingly competitive market while reducing operational costs and the risk of running their own labour intensive in-house operation.

“In addition to that our Content Solutions are tools designed to provide end users with necessary information to analyse bets and entertain as well as stimulate further betting activities. No matter if ready-made all-in-one solutions or individually designed, custom-made solutions, our innovative portfolio of content solutions can be tailored to perfectly suit bookmakers’ needs.

“Our Virtual Sports portfolio is constantly growing and can be characterised by outstanding realism, access to deep statistical data and high revenues. Products like Virtual Football, Virtual Tennis or Virtual Racing are the perfect complement to any product portfolio – simply built for betting.

“Through our Live Channel Online and Live Channel Retail we can offer an intelligent streaming solution, which combines excitement, entertainment and information. Thanks to our wide range of international media rights, the live streaming solution for online, mobile and retail sports betting offers is the perfect component of a modern sportsbook.”

How was 2014 for Betradar?

“The past year was again marked by some momentous decisions and benchmark-setting innovations. These included the introduction of Betradar’s Managed Trading Services, the launch of Betradar’s new Live Channel Online and Betting Software, the development of new virtual gaming solutions in combination with our new Remote Game Server, and many more. In particular, the launch of Betradar’s new Managed Trading Services represents a key milestone in the execution of our strategy of becoming the industry’s unique “one-stop-shop” provider, offering a diverse portfolio of sports data products for customers.”

Contex produces Tokyo Keisu brand electromagnetic non-reset counters - the FX-07P snap-in, the FX-07RL base mount type and the FX-07RT PCB mount type. The company achieves cost effectiveness in the most efficient way - through quality. Although using products of low quality may seem to be cost effective, you finally end up having to invest more time and money to compensate for the lack of quality. Our products are made in Japan and CE, UL certified and RoHS compliant. President Shigeru Tsukakoshi assures customers of their entire satisfaction at the reliability of the products and punctual delivery time.

GBGC was established 15 years ago and has completed consultancy projects for four governments and many gambling operators, many of which are blue chip listed companies. Our expertise lies in the fact that our directors have all worked professionally in the industry. We produce the Global Gambling Report which is a 2,000-page commentary on all the gambling that takes place globally. Packed with 80,000 data points this report gives us a jump start when we approach consultancy assignments. Because we analyse all markets we know what works and what does not work and we bring a lot of blue sky thinking to projects.

Storm Games supplies fully compliant gaming kiosks to operators both in the UK and for export. We are backed by a medium-sized private equity fund and are fully licensed by the UK Gambling Commission. As of September 2013 we have over 3,000 digital products installed or on order throughout Europe and have a target of 4,000 digital kiosks installed by the end of spring 2015. We produce products for both street and arcade markets and are currently producing both software and hardware products for the UK, Spain, Holland, Belgium and Croatia. Our UK digital AWP is now one of the best performing machines in the bar market.

Something to celebrate?

Are you marking an anniversary this year?
Company's 20th? 25th? Or even 50th?
Moving to all-new offices? Celebrating a merger?

One way to mark the occasion is to publish an InterGame or InterGaming Special Issue which will be distributed along with the regular magazine or can be presented as a dedicated section of the publication.

The costs are surprisingly low and the content is provided by our team of professionals working in concert with your own staff.
